

IPO Readiness

Avoid the mishaps that trip up many IPOs. Turn to finance pros who will guide the way, with a clear roadmap and all the essentials for a successful, valuable offering.

Pain Points:

- Companies often don't realize the full amount of effort and complexity involved
- It's an all-consuming process that puts a strain on existing skill sets and bandwidth
- The pressure is on for timely, accurate financial data—or your valuation will suffer
- Companies need to be ready to pivot if other opportunities arise during the process
- Existing systems may not be able to carry the company to the next step

Solution:

- Assess the readiness of the finance team to support the IPO process
- Evaluate the financial data you have, identify any gaps and how to address them
- Look under the financial systems hood—can it handle what's ahead?
- Bring in IPO aces who know your industry and what needs to get done
- View the IPO as more than a one-time event—prep for life as a public company

Benefits:

- IPO readiness roadmap with clear direction, including timeline and key deliverables
- Full prep for SEC and investor scrutiny ahead
- A bridged gap between in-house talent and needed IPO expertise
- Timely, accurate ad-hoc reports that show the company can act as a public company
- A plan built with agility in case IPO plans take a detour with a promising M&A deal

IPO-striving companies need the systems, people and processes in place to regularly produce timely, accurate financial information.
